The Denver Republican reminds one of the democrats in the country regions of Pennsylvania, who are still voting for Andrew Jackson.

The communication published by E. L. Byington, in another column, should be read by all college graduates, and the request that he makes should be favorably considered.

Governor Hill of New York seems to be in trouble. He has been posing as a Jeffersonian and Jacksonian democrat, with special emphasis on the Jacksonian. He has not done much in the way of Jeffersonian simplicity. He is about to be investigated for having spent some twenty thousand dollars on comforts in his executive mansion without the approval of the officers who have the expenditure of the fund from which this was drawn.

The senate is considering a deficiency bill to complete the construction of public buildings. The custom, heretofore, has been to secure an appropriation for a public building, and then draw plans without regard to the amount of the appropriation, though the appropriation was passed with the understanding that it should cover the entire cost of the land and building. For example, an appropriation of three hundred thousand dollars was secured for the erection of the postoffice building in St. Louis. It is now finished, and cost five millions. There is a little excuse for exceeding the appropriations the government usually appropriates too little, and it was absurd in the first place, to attempt to buy the land and erect the building in St. Louis for three hundred thousand dollars. The appropriation ought to have been commensurate with the size of the city. Denver started with the same appropriation, and is still asking for more. If the government had started out with the idea of erecting a building to cost half a million dollars in Denver and had drawn plans accordingly and let the contract, there would have been no trouble in erecting the building with that amount. But according to the present arrangement, the government does the work, and it is costing between two and three times as much as it should.

One of the most attractive features of this city is its broad streets and the regularity with which these streets are laid out. So many additions are now being added to the city that it is quite important that there should be some uniform rule for placing before these additions are accepted by the city. This matter was not important where there were only a few additions, but there are so many now that the council ought to insist on the streets having a certain width, and that these streets when the additions border on the city should be continuations of and parallel with the streets in the city. There should also be some rule regarding alleys so that the sidewalks should not be cut up by teams carrying coal and other heavy material to houses on inside lots. A great many additions have been accepted which are not laid out in harmony with the streets of the city. In one instance an addition was accepted where streets did not run through the addition, leaving the owners some two feet of land all around it. In other cases additions have been connected with streets but fifty feet wide. At present, our lots are rather deep. But there is enough ground I should say, and there is no reason why those living out this should not conform to the rule established in the city. This would be an excellent subject for the board of trade to discuss to-night, so that the subject might be put in some well defined shape for consideration by the council.

The Boston Journal suggests the erection of a memorial of the late Dr. Asa Gray. It says:

"If all those who have derived help or instruction or entertainment from the fascinating studies in which Professor Gray has led the way, and of which he was an acknowledged master, were to contribute in such a tribute it might be made a worthy memorial of him. What the form should be whether a monument or a building, would not greatly matter, so long as it was appropriate to the greatness and originality of his character. As to place there can be no doubt that Cambridge should receive the memorial, and in Cambridge what spot could be more fitting than the Botanic Garden which was the scene of his studies and labors, and to the enrichment of which he gave so much will direct interest? We hope that a movement may at once be begun without delay and may be energetically forwarded."

These comments cannot be too much emphasized. Professor Gray led the kind of a life that did not give him to the work in any publicity. He took hardly excited a comment except among those who knew him or were interested in his work. And yet of the modern scientific school, he was perhaps our best representative. Agassiz and Professor Henry were profoundly respected abroad but the scientific work of the great scholar, of the very best of Professor Gray as the beginning of the Darwinian controversy put himself squarely on the side of Darwin. The "Life and Letters" of Darwin show that his opinion, even more than that of Huxley or Hooker, had weight with Darwin. His review of the "Origin of Species" was the most intelligent of the early reviews of the doctrine published. His fame extended far beyond the borders of this country. He not only had few equals in this country, but few abroad. It would be creditable to this country to show that we appreciate such a man.

Organization for Culture.

To the Editor of the GAZETTE:

DEAR SIR: It is generally conceded that Colorado Springs has a larger number of cultured people within its borders in proportion to its population than any other city west of the Mississippi river. There must be a very large percentage of college graduates here, and it is with the view of bringing this class of people together in a social way that I write this letter. I have long thought that a meeting of the graduates of different universities once a year or oftener at a dinner as a permanent organization would be productive of much good.

In order to test the feeling of others of this class, I will ask all ladies and gentlemen of this city and vicinity who are graduates of a chartered institution either in arts, law, medicine or theology, and who are in sympathy with such a meeting, to communicate with me stating the university of which they are graduates, the year of graduation and the degrees taken, also stating whether they are in sympathy with the organization proposed. If favorable replies be sent, suggestions concerning the best methods of carrying out the plan will be gladly received.

It is hoped that all graduates will send in the information asked above, whether they feel like supporting the plan proposed or not. If a sufficient number of favorable replies are received a call for a meeting will be issued at an early date.

Respectfully,

E. L. BYINGTON.

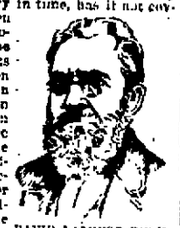
DAVID LATHROP HUNN.

The Oldest Surviving Graduate of Yale, Recently Deceased.

In the catalogue of the alumni of Yale college the names of those who have died are marked with a star. The first name not thus marked in the present catalogue is that of David Lathrop Hunn, of the class of 1813. When the next catalogue is issued a star marking this name will be added to the constellation which precedes and follows. The oldest graduate, to the 20th of January last, then of course the honor to his predecessor.

Mr. Hunn was among that few now remaining who were born with the republic. At Colchester, Mass., on the 9th of November, 1789, he commenced a life which was destined to lack but a year of spanning a century. If it has not entirely covered a century in time, has it not covered half a dozen centuries in progress? Indeed the last half of this long life has seen [illegible] in communication, in transportation, in the mechanic arts and in some branches of science than had occurred in four or five times a similar period in the world's history.



DAVID LATHROP HUNN

When he was a child his father removed to Long Meadow, a town near Springfield, Mass. During the [illegible] his father went on board a privateer commanded by his uncle. The Yankee ship, mistaking a British gunboat for an East Indiaman, caught a tartar. All on board the privateer were captured. Mr. Hunn, the elder, was put on board the Jersey prison ship and suffered terrible hardships. When the war closed he returned home. He married in 1788.

Hunn, the junior the subject of this sketch, entered Yale the year Dwight was born—in 1809, in the days of the presidency of Timothy Dwight, and when the elder Silliman was lecturing on chemistry, geology and mineralogy, at a date when the professor, if able to [illegible] dark holes on the specimen at all could give no explanation and did not know how they were deposited. He was a favorite of his pupils, should pass away, to open a new and entirely unexplored continent to science.

When Mr. Hunn was a junior the war of 1812 came.

"I remember it well," he has said, when recalling the occurrences of this time, "that we took little interest in it after all. Some of the students from the south became greatly interested, but Massachusetts, you know, opposed the war as unnecessary. We did not take overmuch interest in politics, either, though I well remember casting my first vote for president in 1812."

Mr. Hunn used to say that in his days at college the "town" and "gown" of the present were "like brothers to each other and "chums." This undoubtedly partly arose from the post connection with the mother country, and a tendency to take customs from English universities.

"A row once started," he said, "which threatened serious consequences. I forget what started it, but any row, especially the town boys marched down on the college in a body. They were about 100 strong, and the students, on the alarm being given gathered in the yard armed with clubs and clubs. All the faculty were there to keep the students from fighting and the heads of the town officers were all on hand to keep the students in order. The students were to stay in the college and act on the defensive. One of the [illegible] passed between the two parties and [illegible] He was rushed into the college and [illegible] the hands on all but [illegible] when a classmate of mine—George Allen, subsequently a minister—struck him a hard blow with a club. This acted as a signal for the rival [illegible] Allen was [illegible] and [illegible] that was the end of it."

A peculiar fact is noted from Mr. Hunn's testimony as to the habits of students, that all the time he was in college he never saw any one under the influence of liquor. A good many had their wine, but drinking of wine was [illegible].

Upon graduation Mr. Hunn studied for the ministry, and then [illegible] Gallatin, finally joined the Presbyterian church and [illegible] a license of Communion he passed the [illegible] of his long life. His death occurred in Buffalo, N. Y., where he had resided for several years with his [illegible] children, one of [illegible] and one of seven sisters survived him. He was more than 80 years old and [illegible] in Massachusetts.

GENERAL GRANT

Mrs Grant is looking remarkably well, and is certainly a young woman for Washington. We noticed a gloss off quickly at the capital. At least, that was so many old women in Washington society that a lady does not stop going out until she has to walk with a cane and a crutch. Mrs Grant is, to be between 40 and 50, though she must be [illegible], and her hair is still free from gray. The family has received from Grant's bank in the neighborhood of $60,000, and Mrs Grant gets $5,000 a year from the government as a general's widow. She is much thought of here in Washington, and at Mrs Stanford's reception all the oldest people of the capital were present.

Senator George Vest, of Missouri, has been doing much speaking this season, and he has added to his fame as an orator. He is a broad, thick-set man, with a round, full face, blonde hair and [illegible] mustache that curves down over his mouth. He [illegible] as he talks, and he walks [illegible]. He is full of ideas, and he believes that Cleveland will be nominated this year. Vest is now 57 years old. He was a Confederate senator at Richmond during the war. He lives very well at the capital, and has a pleasant home near Iowa Circle.

The annual spring election of city officers is only about six weeks off, and as yet no candidates have been named. Yesterday morning about half past nine o'clock a very serious runaway occurred on North Tejon street. As Mrs. Frank Waters and coachman were driving down the street in a small road cart the horse attached to the vehicle took fright at the arc light on the corner of Tejon and Bijou streets which had been lowered for the purpose of putting in the carbon sticks. The driver was unable to control the horse, which started rapidly down the street. When opposite Hillhouse's grocery the wheels of the cart caught in the street railway track and the whole was suddenly overturned. Mrs. Waters and the driver were thrown violently to the ground. The latter escaped with a few bruises, but the former had an arm broken and sustained serious internal injuries.

For some time past it has been known that negotiations were pending for the sale of the A. Z. Sheldon ranch between this city and Colorado City. These negotiations have been successfully conducted and the sale of the property is now an assured fact. The purchasers are a syndicate of local and eastern capitalists which was organized by Mr. A. L. Lawton, the real estate and insurance agent. Among the gentlemen interested in the purchase of the property in this city are J. A. Hendricks, A. D. Crysue, E. J. Eaton and other prominent holders of the West Colorado Springs company. The amount of cash consideration paid was $50,000. Mr. Sheldon still reserves about six acres for his personal use. The land purchased will be surveyed and platted into town lots and will be placed on the market in the early part of the coming spring.
